What is it like to view the world through the eyes of a horse? To understand a horse's relationship with the land? What stories do horses hold inside them? How can their sensual and perceptive natures help us to interpret and write our own stories? A horse is an instinctive animal. Humans, too, are instinctive and, like horses, our natural environment is not between four walls. Horses remind us to be engaged with the world. They understand fear. They understand courage. We'll get to know our horses from the ground. We'll get to know our horses from their backs. We'll ride in small groups formed by our various comfort levels. We'll ride in mountain meadows, across open grasslands, and on forested trails. We'll immerse ourselves in literature about horses and explore what the natural world of the horse can teach us about writing. For 6 days, we will write about, read about, and be about horses!
